Foch never let up, pushing and pushing against the German onslaught. Gases used included chlorine, mustard gas and phosgene.

As the presidential election unfolded, the extent of just how tired Americans were became apparent. This allowed the transfer of large numbers of German troops from the East to the Western Front, resulting in the German March Offensive. Poems, stories and other propaganda written by Austrian women.

In response, in February the German General Staff convinced Chancellor Theodor Ebert to accept a conscription draft that was universal and included blacks on the same terms as whites, although they served in different units.
